PREFACE

TO THE FIRST AMERICAN EDITION.

A few years since, the Messrs. Carvill, of New York, having it in contemplation to publish an American edition of the Greek and English Lexicon of Dr. Donnegan, requested me to aid them in the accomplishment of their laudable purpose. The work, as it then was, (the first English edition,) appeared to me to need revision in some important particulars. A slight examination had convinced me that many words were admitted into it, which served only to swell its size, without adding to its practical value, — words which might with propriety be looked for in a "Thesaurus" alone. On the other hand, a goodly number of words, met with in Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Pindar, Aristophanes, Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, and other writers of less note, were sought for in vain.

I cannot better explain my meaning than by a reference to the columns of the Lexicon itself, and to the mode pursued in endeavouring to remove excrescences, to supply deficiencies, and, as far as time would permit, to revise, correct, and enlarge the first English edition for publication in this country.

On the first page, I had erased about two dozen words as inadmissible in a lexicon of this character: viz. ἄαδα, (only in Hesychius, from whom Planche received it in his Greek and French Lexicon: Hesychius says it is a Laconian word and cites "Aristoph. ἐν γλώσσαις":) ἄαδεν, (Hesychius has ἄαδεν· ἐλύπησαν; for which some read ἐλύπησεν: this reading alone can justify the definition given by Planche, and after him by Donnegan:) ἀαδένη, (taken probably from Planche: Hesychius has ἀαδένη· ὑεία κόπρος:) ἀαδέω Nos. 1 and 2, (word for word from Planche, with no authority but Hesychius and Suidas:) ἀάθικτος, (Planche and Hesychius:) ἄαικτος, (from Planche, who obtained it from Hesychius: it is cited in Stephan. Thesaur. from Cyril. Gloss. and from Hesychius:) ἀάλιος, (Planche, Hesychius, and some glossaries:) ἀάμινς, (the only authority, it is believed, is the Index to Stephan. Thesaur., where it is said to be found "in Epigram.": Donnegan seems here also to be indebted to Planche:) ἀάνης and ἀανῆς, (Planche and Hesychius:) ἀανθα, (from Hesychius: Planche has it without the article, or the termination of the genitive; so also Donnegan:) ἄας, (same remark:) ἀάσαι, (Donnegan, after Planche, says "ἀάσαι, 1 aor. infin. of ἀάσκω or ἀάω": no authority for the form ἀάσκω:) ἀάσθην, (not from ἀάσκω, but from ἀάω:) ἀασίφορος, (from Planche and Hesychius:) ἀάστορος, (Planche and Hesychius:) ἀαστὸς, (from Planche: no authority but Hesychius:) ἀάταλος, (same remark:) ἀάτυλος, (same remark:) ἀέω, ἀήσω, (Donnegan seems to have followed Planche, and has ἀάω, ἀέω, fut. ἀάσω, ἀήσω, with the significations in precisely the same order as in Planche: ἀέω is admissible, from which ἀέσαι, 1 aor. Hom., but for ἀήσω, it is believed, there is no authority:) ἄβ, (seems to be taken from Planche:) ἄβα, (without genitive or article as in Planche, who obtained it from Hesychius:) ἄβαγνα, (same remark:) ἀβάγητρος, (Planche and Hesychius:) ἄβαζος, (Suidas and Planche:) ἀβάθματα, (Planche and Hesychius.)

Of these words, all but six were omitted in the second English edition. It would, perhaps, have been entirely consistent with the plan of revision adopted by Dr. Donnegan, in the preparation of the second edition, to have rejected these six also.

Again; in the course of my private reading, or whilst guiding the reading and studies of others, several words, of established authority, could not be found in the Lexicon; such, for example, as the following; βαρυπενθής,* δεκτὼρ,* βαρύκοτος,† βαρύδικος,* δεξιώνυμος,* δημόπρακτος,† δημορρίφης,† διάδετος,* διαμαθύνω,* δύϊος,* δυσανλία,* δυσβάϋκτος,† from Æschylus: βερέσχεθος,† from Aristophanes: βαρύκομπος,* διανίσσομαι,† from Pindar: ἀχαριστία,† δεκαδεὺς,* διαδωρέομαι,* διαταγεύω,* from Xenophon: δεινόπους,* δημόλευστος,* δυσάνεμος,† δύσανλος,* from Sophocles: διαδέξιος,* διαμιστύλλω,† διεξελίσσω,† from Herodotus: διαδιφρεύω,* διάλλαγμα,* διαπτιχὴ,† διατινάσσω,* διευθυντήριος,* διχόμυθος,* διχορρύαγὴς,* δύσγνοια,* from Euripides: διαθειόω,* from Homer: δυσκομιδὴ,* from Thucydides: &c.

My first aim, therefore, was, to reject all words supported by no better authority than those enumerated from page 1, and to introduce, as largely as time and the design of the work would allow, such omitted words as ought to hold a place in every Greek lexicon designed for the use of even our college students.

My next object was, to revise, as far as circumstances would permit, the individual articles; to introduce an intelligible notation of the quantities; and to enlarge the definitions and explanations of some of the particles. It was not until I had laboured for some time, in pursuance of these objects, more particularly the first, and the appointed time of publication was at hand, that a second English Edition was announced. As soon as this edition was received, I proceeded to examine it with reference to the proposed omissions, additions, alterations, &c. I was surprised to find that the plan pursued, quite unexpectedly to me, in the preparation of the second English edition, very nearly resembled the one which I had proposed to myself in the preparation of the American edition, and in fulfilling which I had been labouring, simultaneously as it seems, with Dr. Donnegan. While it was, on the one hand, somewhat mortifying to find my labour in these particulars anticipated, it was consoling, on the other hand, to reflect that the correctness of my views, in regard to the primary wants of the Lexicon, were thus confirmed, and that the plan of improvement originated and was mainly accomplished at home, where it is undoubtedly better it should have been done.

These circumstances are mentioned in order to account, in some measure, for the want of further corrections or alterations in various articles. If it could have been foreknown by me, that a portion of my labour would be superseded by those of Dr. Donnegan himself, I would gladly have given the time occupied in this labour to some other department of improvement.

It is worthy of remark that about seven-eighths of the words, which I had scored in the first English edition for rejection, were found to be omitted in the second English edition; and that about three-fourths of the words prepared for insertion in the American edition, were found to be already inserted in the second English edition, with definitions &c. generally satisfactory.

Several corrections, also, that must have been made almost simultaneously by Dr. Donnegan and myself, afford proof of the similarity and even coincidence of our plans. For example, the last two significations of ἄβαξ, in the first edition, taken apparently from Planche, I rejected, and was not surprised to find them rejected in the second English edition. The article "ἀβραδούλη, ης, ἡ, a concubine," I did not hesitate to reject, fully believing that the Doctor had been misled by a false reading of Hesychius; viz. ἀβραδούλη· παλλακὴ, in the place of the more approved, and, undoubtedly, correct reading, ἄβρα· δούλη· παλλακή. Hesychius intended to define ἄβρα by δούλη, and then by παλλακή. Donnegan evidently read ἀβραδούλη, as old Constantine had done, in his Lexicon published in 1562, and embracing nearly all the Hesychian words. In the second English edition, I found the article had been expunged. The signification "the wind-pipe," given to ἀγητὴρ, I erased, and was pleased to find that Dr. Donnegan had done the same. Whence did he obtain this meaning? Hesychius has put down, as one signification, ἑορτή. Did the Doctor read ἀορτή? For ἀγκυροβάλλω, I ventured to substitute ἀγκυροβολέω, the correct reading in

* Introduced into the second English Edition.
† Introduced, for the first time, into the American Edition.

Hesychius. Ἀειγενεσία "duration by generation," I corrected to "existence without end," which corresponds in sense with the correction made by Dr. Donnegan in his second edition, viz., "eternal duration of existence." In the article "ἀθήλυντος, not womanish," &c., I had introduced the word "rendered" between "not" and "womanish," and rejected the remaining significations. In this also I was happy to find that Dr. Donnegan agreed with me. Ἀλλαντοποιέω "to exercise the trade of a pork-butcher," and ἀλλαντοποιὸς "a pork-butcher," I had already corrected so as to coincide with the corrected articles in the second English edition. Ἀνυτέκμαρκτος (Planche has the same typographical error, and has the word out of its alphabetical order, as in the first English edition,) I had corrected and restored to its proper place. Ἀνδρωνυμικὸν ὄνομα (under ἀνδρωνυμικὸς) "name of a man" I had already ventured to correct, and was gratified to find, in the second English edition, my correction confirmed. Planche seems to have led the Doctor into the mistake. Ἀξιοβίωτος "leading an insupportable life, not meriting the name of life" was corrected, and found to agree exactly with the correction of Dr. Donnegan himself in his second edition. Compare Planche on the same word. Ἅπάλιος, "a kid" (Planche has ἁπάλιας, "a kid,") was corrected for "a sucking pig," as it stands in the second English edition. Ἀρνέω "to deceive," (Dr. Donnegan probably mistook the German "tauchen" for "täuschen" in Schneider's Lexicon, and translated "to deceive,") I did not hesitate to correct by erasing "to deceive," not doubting that Dr. Donnegan on a revision of his work would sanction it.

These are a few of the coincidences in alterations, corrections, additions, or suppressions, between Dr. Donnegan and myself, which I mention here for the purpose of showing that, even in the opinion of the author, the work needed some revision; and that much labour, on my part, in endeavouring to improve the first edition, was anticipated by the more acceptable labour of Dr. Donnegan himself.

In some instances, words rejected by Dr. Donnegan, in his second edition, I have restored, with some corrections, in the American edition; as, for example, ἀβαμβάκευτος. In the first edition, it is defined "whose face is not painted." Valpy, in his "Fundam. Words &c.," has "undiluted": Constantine, "nullo lenocinio fucatus." The word occurs in Athenæus, 4, 24. Schweigh., once ἀβαμβάκευτος, and once ἀβαμβάκευστος. It is said of food that has not been dipped or immersed in, or seasoned with, rich and piquant sauces. The Thema is α priv. and βάμβα for βαμμα. See ἔμβαμμα. Donnegan's definition was obtained from Hesychius, or, perhaps, from Planche, who took βάμβα· χρῶμα, from Hesychius.

Translations of passages from Greek authors, I have, in a few instances, made anew, where some degree of vagueness seemed to attach itself to the one presented in the English edition. For example, under ἀπόδειξις, we find, in the English edition, the phrase ἱστορίης ἀπόδεξις ἥδε Ἡροδότου translated "this history is the production of Herodotus"; for which I have substituted "this is the exposition of the history of Herodotus." One other correction, of this kind, I may be permitted to mention here, by way of "erratum," as, by some unaccountable inadvertency or oversight, it was not introduced from my manuscript into the printed text, in place of the old translation, which now, in consequence, retains its place. Under ἐπάϊστος is a translation of the phrase ὡς ἐπάϊστος ἐγένετο τοῦτο εἰργασμένος as follows, "as it was quite evident that he had been guilty." For this I had substituted "after that it was known that he had done this," or, more literally, "after that he was known to have been the perpetrator of this deed."

In the introduction of entirely new articles or the substitution of certain articles for others already existing in the English editions, I have made free use of the Greek and German lexicons of Passow, Schneider, and Riemer; of the Greek and French lexicon of Planche; of that of Sturtz for Xenophon, and of Damm for Homer; of the Index or lexicon to the Analecta of Jacobs; and, to some extent, of Schleusner's lexicon of the LXX, and of Wahl's lexicon of the New Testament.

For the notation of the quantities, and for various notes and remarks pertaining to quantity, metres, and prosody, I am indebted chiefly to Passow.

I have received, also, much valuable assistance from my esteemed friend, Professor J A Alexander, of Nassau Hall; and while I make my most grateful acknowledgments of his services, I cannot but regret that much of his assiduous and faithful labour was, in a measure, lost, inasmuch as the second English edition had anticipated, to such an extent, the additional articles prepared for the American edition.

To Dr. Donnegan, the gratitude of all the lovers of the Greek Language and Literature, in Great Britain and the United States, is justly due, for his persevering efforts to furnish a Greek and English Lexicon, on such a plan, and of such comprehensiveness; and I shall ever esteem it an honour to have co-operated with him in advancing toward perfection (which is not to be attained at once) this highly important undertaking. Although the Lexicon, in its present form, admits of still further improvement, and is yet very far from the point of perfection to which I long to see it advanced, still the work will prove, I doubt not, a valuable companion and assistant to those who push their Greek reading beyond the narrow limits of College study, as well as to those who are just forming an acquaintance with this noblest of languages.

In conclusion, I fondly cherish the hope that what I have been permitted to attempt or accomplish in furtherance of the excellent plan of Dr. Donnegan, will be regarded by him as an humble effort to advance the study of the Greek to that elevation to which he aims to raise it, and for which object he has so creditably and successfully toiled.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND ENGLISH EDITION.

In bringing out a new Edition of the Greek and English Lexicon, the Author thinks it incumbent on him to give some account of the Improvements which this Edition has received. Notwithstanding the high degree of favour with which his first attempt to advance the interests of Grecian literature was received, and the kind indulgence extended to its deficiencies, or to its errors, he was well aware that it was expected by those who looked with favour on his efforts, that when he was again to appear before the Public, it would be found that such encouragement had had the effect of stimulating his exertions to improve his work. The opportunity of justifying such expectations has now been presented. It will be seen below, what were the chief points to which the labour and researches of the Author have been more especially directed, and an examination of the book itself will show how far he has succeeded in redeeming the tacit pledge he considers himself as having given.

Attention has been most particularly directed to correct any deviation from the Natural and Philosophical arrangement of the meanings of words—and a further developement has been given to the Etymological part—two points of the first importance, as forwarding one of the great ends proposed in instructing youth in the Greek language, that of calling forth and exercising the Analytical powers of the mind. It is, indeed, to be regretted, that those who believe that a certain acquaintance with the learned languages constitutes the best foundation of a good education, do not adopt the advice so long since given by the celebrated Author of the Greek Thesaurus, Stephanus, of commencing a classical education by the study of Greek.

The principal improvements will be found to be as follow—

Above two hundred pages of entirely new Matter have been added to the present edition.

Half the work has been re-written, and the entire newly modelled, in conformity with the general plan, but with much improvement and simplification in the details.

The Particles, Adverbs, and Prepositions, have been illustrated by numerous new and appropriate Examples, in elucidation of the Observations and Rules of eminent Philologists, the substance of which is arranged under the words to which they refer.

The Grammatical Construction of words, has been carefully noted, in order to guide the Student in his choice of Significations, and also in the application of the words themselves in writing Greek.

The Tenses and Persons of Defective Verbs, have been arranged in Alphabetical Order, with references to the Verbs from which they immediately derive, and to those to which they are assigned. Tenses and Persons, likewise, of other Verbs, and Inflections of Nouns, which, from Dialectic or Poetic alterations, or other causes, may prove embarrassing to the Student, will be also found in their alphabetical places in the work.

Much Grammatical perplexity has been got rid of, without admitting any Innovations, however ingenious, that are not sanctioned by sound Philological Principles, and which do not materially facilitate the acquisition of the Language.

The Etymological part has been much enlarged and improved, and such references have been subjoined to Derivatives, as to bring it into one uniform and satisfactory System.

The passages from Classical Writers given as Examples, have been anew compared with the original works, and some of them removed, to give place to others better calculated to illustrate the peculiar Genius of the Greek Language.

The References to Classical Writers annexed to the Significations of Words, have been sedulously collated, as being important to the younger Student in directing his choice, and to be more advanced as a sanction for the meaning offered.

At the beginning of each letter, the Dialectic or Poetical changes affecting such letter are noticed. It will be found peculiarly advantageous to the young Student to make himself familiar with these, as by bearing them in mind many apparent anomalies will find a ready explanation.

From the extraordinary care bestowed in correcting the Press, under the constant superintendance of the Author, it is hoped typographical correctness has been secured.

It will not be difficult for any person who feels interested in the subject to ascertain the nature and extent of the improvements which this edition has received—but those only who have been engaged in labours of a similar kind can truly estimate the toil which the task of making such improvements requires. Next to advancing the general interests of Grecian Literature, the Author has peculiarly at heart to be useful to two Classes of persons in particular—should his work prove serviceable to those who, retiring from active life, resume the cultivation of the Studies of their youth in retirement, and tend in any degree to alleviate the weighty labours of that most estimable Class of men, who devote themselves to the education of youth, he will be enabled to look back with complacency on his long and arduous toils.

In sending forth his work the Author cannot refrain from publicly expressing his gratitude to the amiable and truly learned Mr. Hase, Professor of Modern Greek and Palæology, and Keeper of Manuscripts in the King's Library at Paris, who most kindly aided his researches by his valuable advice, and most liberally communicated to him his own notes in manuscript, which he has made use of as far as was compatible with the scope of the present work. The edition of Leo Diaconus by that gentleman, incorporated into the edition of Byzantine Historians, and published at Bonn, by the celebrated and lamented Niebuhr, will give some idea of the extent of Mr. Hase's knowledge of the Greek, no less in its Classic purity than in every stage of its decline.

GREEK AND ENGLISH

LEXICON.

Α, ἄλφα, the first letter of the Greek alphabet.
As a numeral letter, ά with a mark placed over it, stands for one, with the mark underneath, ͵α, for one thousand.
In compound words, this letter has often a privative, or negative force, like that of the particles in, im, un, ir, in English; thus, ὀδήλος, visible, ἄδηλος, invisible; δυνατὸς, possible, ἀδύνατος, impossible, &c.
When a in such s. is prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel, it often takes ν, as some say, for euphony; but as this does not occur in all such words, according to others, as an abbrev., of ἄνευ, or for ἀν, or ἀνα considered as Th. of ἄνευ, See ἀν– neg. in its alph. order.
In some words, α has the force of δυς, implying difficulty, &c. as ἀαγὴς, difficult to break, and in others, that of κακὸς, thus, ἀβουλία, s. s. as κακοβουλία, or δυσβουλία, and ἀπρόσωπος, s. s. as κακοπρόσωπος.
It sometimes has the force of ἅμα, with, together, thus, ἄκοιτις, ἄλοχος, one who partakes the same couch, or bed, a wife, a bedfellow: from α, and κοίτη, λέχος.
Α, in some words, is supposed by some Gram. to have the force of ἄγαν, or πολὺ, much, in great quantity, &c., implying intensity of degree, or augmentation, thus, ἄβρομος, with loud noise, roaring, ἄξυλος, abounding in wood, ἀσπερχὴς, s. s. as πολυσπερχὴς, &c. ¶ eminent Philol. deny this notion, as Valcken. Adon. p. 214, sq.
In fine, a seems often placed for sake of euphony before words beginning with double consonants, without affecting the meaning, ἄσταχυς, ἀστεροπὴ, ἀσπαίρω, have the same significations as στάχυς, στεροπὴ, σπαίρω.
Ἄ, ἀὰ, interject. ah! oh! denotes admiration, astonishment, or complaint, or compassion, as Iliad. 17, 201. 24, 518. in the former signif., some Grammarians write ἄ.

Ἄ expresses sorrow, compassion, and discontent—ἄ, ἄ, laughter. Aristoph.

Ἄν, a particle, equally used in poet. and prose; the enclitic κε, and before a vowel κεν (poet. only), in Hom. is similar in sense and construct. It communicates to a proposition an expression of 'uncertainty,' contingency,' 'doubt,' 'bare possibility,' 'conjecture,' it qualifies or moderates what would else be positive, or peremptory, and so, may be freq. rendered by, 'perhaps,' 'probably,' 'possibly,' 'rather,' 'scarcely,' 'hardly;' also, 'if possible,' 'should it suit, or please, or be convenient,' and so forth—where 'volition' is expressed, it removes the notion of 'fixed resolution,' marking rather a 'wish, desire, inclination;' hence, s., 'would that,' 'were it possible,' 'could'—very freq. s. is 'may, might;' 'can, could;' 'would, should,' sometimes 'ought'—it further denotes 'repetition,' 'habit,' and so, 'accustomed,' 'wont,' 'usually.'—With relat. pron. adject. and adverbs, it gives the indeterminate s. of—ever—soever; thus, ὅς ἄν, whosoever; οὐδεὶς ἄν, nobody whosoever; ὅ, τι ἄν, whatever, ὅτ' (for ὅσα) ἄν, whatsoever. οὔδεν ἄν, nothing whatever.—With the Indicat. and especially the Imperf. it very frequently expresses an action as occurring not at a fixed time, but when an occasion offers, s. 'should, or would have,' had the opportunity offered, had some other action taken place, as Dem. Epist. 3, p. 117; also, 'ability,' 'could, might have,' Eurip. Iphig. A. 1591. Xen. Cyrop. 8, 1, 38. with pres. actions however, ἄν is put with the optat.—with the imperf. also freq. it marks the 'repetition' of an action, 'custom, habit,' 'usual practice,' as Xen. Mem. 4, 1, 2. Herodot. 3, 51.—with the pres. it moderates the decisiveness of affirmation; thus s. 'scarcely, hardly, probably,' as Plato. Protagor. p. 193. (by κεν, Odyss. 24, 87.) Aristoph. Acharn. 873. it has a similar influence on the future, 'probably,' 'very likely,' 'may be,' Iliad. 22, 42. Xen. Cyrop. 8, 5, 21. Isocrat. Paneg. p. 79. A. B.—with the perf. very rarely, it expresses, 'possibility, likelihood,' s. 'would have,' as in Dem. pro Coron. ἀπολώλατε, cited Gram. Matth. See 509. 5, b. Herm. ad Viger. cap. 8. sec. 2. reg. 7. prefers the reading ἀπολώλειτε. In general, with the imperf. pl. perf., and aor. of the indic., it denotes the possibility of an action occurring under certain circumstances, or when an occasion offers, thus freq. s. 'should, would,' 'might, could.' With the Subj. mostly with an adv. or pron. relat. it communicates an indeterm. s.—ever,—soever,—&c. it has also the s. of a future, 'shall, will,' Iliad. 1, 184. and 205. 11, 431. Odyss. 22, 325. in interrog. Plat. Crit. p. 116. sometimes also nearly as an optat. 'may,' 'very likely,' or 'perhaps,' Odyss. 1, 396. the indeterm. s. is in all cases to be traced even as a future. The optat. occurs much more freq. in a fut. s. and especially in Attic writ. With the Optat. (this the most general use) it serves mostly to determine the potential s. expressing 'ability,' 'possibility,' and may be rendered by 'be able, can,' 'could,' 'may,' 'might'—also the indeterm. s., 'doubt,' 'contingency,' 'conjecture:' hence, s. 'probably,' 'perhaps,' 'very likely,' as Herodot. 1, 70. 3, 23. freq. 'hardly, scarcely,' Herodot. 2, 41. Xen. Cyrop. 1, 2, 11. and 1, 2, 13.—it moderates the peremptoriness of assertion, as Xen. Cyr. 1, 4, 13. 13, 1, 43. 7, 5, 25. —to express a 'habit,' 'custom,' s. 'usually,' 'wont,' 'accustomed,' also, as 'might be expected,' Thuc. 1, 50. and 3, 84. Gram. Matth. sec. 514, 5.—It softens the harshness of a direct command, and rather in form of request occurs sometimes as an Imperat. 'canst, or mayest,' 'if it pleases thee,' 'should it suit,' 'please to,' &c. Odyss. 1, 287. Sophoc. Elect. 1498. Philoct. 674. Aristoph. Acharn. 1200. (sometimes rendering the order more peremptory, as Iliad. 24, 263. this very rarely.) So also in negat. interrog. 'thou wouldst not?' Odyss. 7, 22, and 22, 132.—in expressing 'volition,' it declares an 'inclination, desire,' 'if occasion offers,' implied, Plat. Cratyl. 26. 'would,' that, were it 'possible,' &c.—in a future s. freq. in Attic. writ.—The Optat. in Interrogations generally takes ἄν. Dawes Misc. Crit. p. 207.

With the Imperat. ἄν moderates the peremptoriness of command, as, Odyss. 12, 82.

With Infin. and Particip. 'it gives these moods the same s. as the optat. subjunct. or infin. with ἄν, would have in the resolution by the finite verb,' Gram. Matth. sec. 579, 1. So also Schæf. Mel. p. 60.

Ἄν, is often repeated in a sentence, especially by the Att., some think redundant, as Zeune, ad Viger. Abresch. ad Æschyl. t. 1. p. 224. and Gram. Matth. sec. p. 599. e. Herm. adnot. 283. ad Viger. 483. holds a contrary op.; an infin. or participle, mostly occurs in the sentence, to which one ἄν refers, and when even oftener repeated, as freq. by Att. writ., it marks the indeterm. s. more forcibly—ἄν κε, occur together, poet. more freq. ἄν μέν κε, as the repet. does not appear to influence the s. κε is redundant.
